At the Last. This beautiful poem appeared originally in the Independent, written on the progress "Man goeth forth into his work and to his labor until this evening."

The stream is calmest when it meets the tide, And flowers are sweetest at the eve-tide, And birds most musical at close of day, And saints divinest when they pass away.

Morning is lovely—but a better charm— Lies hidden in the evening's robe of balm; And weary man must ever love her best, For Morning toil to toil, but Night to rest.

She comes from heaven, and on her wings— She bears— A holy fragrance, like the breath of prayer; Foretaste of angels follows in her train, To shut the weary eye of Day in pain.

All things are hushed before her, as she comes— O'er earth a shy but in the smile of repose; The eolian sigh, a breeze, and a power, That morning knows not, in the evening hour.

"Until the evening" we must weep and toil, Plough's heels stern furrow, dig the weary soil, Tread with and feet our rough and thorny way, And bear the heat and burden of the day.

Oh! when our sun is setting, may we glide Like summer-evening, down the summer side, And leave behind us, as we pass away, Sweet, starry twilight round our sleeping clay.

Noble Sentiments. Mrs. Erwin—I ask a place in the Republican for the following extracts from the N. O. Times. I think it well to disseminate all such sentiments. They break down
